Dairy Herd Improvement Program

Fifty years of DHIA recordkeeping clearly shows that the dairyman who keeps records on his cows improves his herd. He produces milk more efficiently and lowers the cost of milk production. DHIA records over the years show that in good times or in bad times, the dairyman with an efficient milk-producing herd receives the greatest returns from his dairy enterprise. More dairyman should be keeping records on their dairy herds. Three "types" of record keeping plans are now available, one of which will suit the needs of any dairy farmer in the country, regardless of size.

1. STANDARD DHIA PLAN — DHIA supervisor obtains the milk and butterfat, feed, feed cost and income over feed cost records for the individual cows and herd each month of the year. Identification records are maintained and recorded. DHIA records are authenticated as they are obtained by a disinterested person — the DHIA supervisor. The records are used in proving DHIA sires. Complete records provide the dairyman with full information which he can use to improve the producing efficiency of his dairy herd.

2. OWNER - SAMPLER PLAN— Under this plan the dairyman may obtain records on his cows and herd as complete as under the Standard DHIA Plan, but they are not authenticated, since the dairyman himself takes the milk weights and samples, which the DHIA supervisor uses to complete the records. The cost of this plan is usually about half that of the Standard DHIA Plan. (This plan is not available in Appomattox County at this time.)

3. WEIGH-A-DAY-A-MONTH Plan— This is a simple low-cost plan in which the dairyman on the 15th day of each month takes and records milk weights only on each of his cows and feed records on his herd and sends these data to a computing office where the records are calculated for the individual cows and herd month-after-month, and for the year. Production records for the individual cows consist of milk records only. For the herd, production records consist of milk and butterfat records, value of product, feed cost and income over feed cost. WADAM records are satisfactory to use as a guide to culling low-producing cows, feeding, according to production, and selecting the better cows in the herd from which to raise the replacements. The cost of this plan is only a few cents per month per cow.

Off-Flavor Danger to Dairymen

Off-flavors possibly do more to cut milk sales than any other one thing — and it's primarily up to the farmer to avoid them.

Dairy plants try to screen out all off-flavored milk as it comes into the plant, but it's hard to keep it all out. Some plants have installed expensive vacuum - type milk deodorizers which will remove a minimum amount of volatile off-flavors from milk.

This is the time of year when off-flavors originating from pastures are of top concern. Even when pastures are free from obnoxious weeds, there should be some control of grazing. A greasy flavor in milk is a natural flavor, but yet any sudden change from winter feed to pasture will cause a distinct change in the flavor of the milk.

Introduce the milking herd to spring pastures slowly. Graze only for short periods at first, and lengthen the grazing period as time goes on. When full grazing is reached, remove the cows from pasture two or three hours before milking. This will prevent any sudden change in the flavor of milk because of spring pasture.

When pastures are infested with wild onion or garlic, a more strict program for grazing is necessary. It is hard to destroy these weeds through chemical sprays. Chemicals are effective, but only through a planed program of spraying over a period of two or three years. Managed grazing of the milking herd is the most effective way to control off-flavor.

Remove the herd at least five to seven hours before milking, if you want to keep the onion and garlic flavors down to a minimum. With such short grazing periods, abundant growth in the pasture is a must. Otherwise the herd may as well be kept in a dry lot or in the barn. When the herd is brought in from pasture, feed plenty of hay. In five to seven hours, most of the onion or garlic flavor will leave the animal's system.

Next to good pasture, good silage is the most economical feed for the dairy cow. Here again, the problem of off-flavogs can be critical. Silage flavors can enter milk in two ways: through the digestive tract, into the blood stream, and then into milk; or through the respiratory system, into the blood stream, and then into milk. Milk will absorb very little of the silage off-flavoer directly from the air.

What you don't know won't hurt you, but but it may make you act pretty stupid. -Banking.

NEW INSECT REPELLANT

The latest thing in all - purpose insect repellants is diethyl toluamide.

Test repellants containing this chemical display twice as much resistance to normal "wear-off action" as do other types.

The new repellant can be safely applied to the skin or clothing and will successfully protect the wearer against mosquitoes, chiggers, ticks, fleas and biting flies. It offers better protection generally than any other single chemical or combination of chemicals.

Its high rististance to rubbing means longer-lasting protection for farmers and all outdoorsmen.

The new repellant out- performs all others against the stable fly, and is good as any other for deer flies or sand flies. In addition, a pleasant lotion "feel" makes it ideal for picnickers and backyard gardeners.
